Keep reading! Use Adobe Photoshop Elements to Edit Multiple Images The good thing about Photoshop Elements is that it enables you to edit images without having to use a computer with a different version of Photoshop. To edit and create multiple images in Photoshop Elements you need to have at least two Photoshop Elements on your computer. This feature makes working with images much easier for both professionals and casual photographers. One of the major differences between Adobe Photoshop Elements and Adobe Photoshop is that Photoshop Elements is designed to work for Internet and computer systems, while Photoshop is designed to work for desktop computers only. Adobe Photoshop Elements has its advantages, but it does not have features required to edit multiple images easily. In this article, we will show you how to edit multiple images at home with two different versions of Photoshop Elements. Use Photoshop Elements to Edit Multiple Images with the Floating Toolbars This is the most common method for editing multiple images with Photoshop Elements: You open one of the images that you need to edit. Select the second image that you want to edit. Go to the Layers panel and select the Send To Back option. Select the first image and Click the Merge Down button. Now you can work on all the images at the same time, as they are no longer stacked over each other. With this method, you work on the images separately but both images are visible on the screen. To access the floating toolbars, click the bottom left corner icon on your screen and then click on the default name of the Photoshop Elements icon which looks like a folder. After that, two toolbars will be displayed on the screen, with the name Applications. Click on the name of the first image, and then the Photoshop Elements Toolbox appears. Click the Merge Down button and then you are able to work with all the images at once. If you want to remove one of the images from the merged image, you can press the Delete key on your keyboard to remove it. To remove a second image, you can either select it again and then press the Delete key or you can open the Layers panel and select the first image before pressing the Delete key. The ink on my new book is barely dry, but that does not mean I am not putting in a good day's work at the lab. I am working on my "Landscape" chapter, trying to find the right balance between crafting a story and telling it as authentically as possible. I know this chapter of the book has special significance to my husband's family, so I am mindful of my phrasing as well as my research. Our garden is in its final stages and needs to be planted. My little buddy is about 1 year old now and still thinks he can eat all the veggies before they are planted. He also likes to eat all of my parsley, cilantro and dill, so I am going to make a big splash with the garlic, shallots and onions I am planning on planting in the greenhouse this fall. At the end of the growing season, I will transplant these hardy crops to our garden. In addition to the cilantro, parsley and dill, I am planning to start seeds this week, including organic peppers, tomatoes and chiles. Asian basil, an indeterminate dwarf eggplant, a determinate greenleaf lettuce and a new type of salvia, purple and white, from a friend who grows them on her land near Austin. Other than my son, who has joined me once again in the garden, we have the returning gardener in tow. Laura, our dog, is enjoying her second sabbatical from the garden, this time at our place in Georgia. She made the switch in Maryland, and Georgia is her home for now. Georgia's climate is a little chillier than our Maryland home, so we just need to remember to take our jackets. Laura prefers the cool temperatures, but I am ready for an energetic dog who likes to work the earth. Fresh herbs, especially thyme, oregano, rosemary, basil and a super-sweet and versatile garlic chive, are his particular fave this season. As my son's whole life has been a little unusual, he has enjoyed the world that has opened up for him, if not always the life choices. He is, in many ways, a fearless and adventuresome young man. The only way he can process a new world of information is if he has a relationship with the person providing the information. It is not always easy for him to assimilate new information and put it to use.
